ASSOCIATE CIO, IT SERVICES

The Information Technology Services Department at the University of Lethbridge is seeking applications for the position of Associate CIO reporting to the CIO.

In collaboration with the CIO, the Associate CIO helps define the vision, priorities, objectives of IT Services and is responsible for their implementation and execution within the IT Services department. The Associate CIO plays a significant role in implementing the IT Services management framework and processes, and diagnosing opportunities to achieve University objectives through processes, services and technology. The Associate CIO will work to understand current and projected business results and how the IT Services program can be leveraged to impact those results within the post-secondary environment.

The successful candidate must possess excellent leadership, managerial, analytical, organizational, communication (written and oral), planning and decision making skills. Demonstrated team building and relationship management skills enabling them to work well across functions are critical for success in this exciting opportunity.

The individual should also be connected within the IT community and able to leverage contacts; be service focused and be able to cultivate a service attitude and culture within the IT unit; and have proven success and experience with IT operations, applications management, frameworks and best practices (i.e. PM, ITIL, COBIT, SOA, EA). Strong project management skills will be essential to work with the PMO to ensure that all concurrent projects undertaken are on track and holding people to deliverables.

The successful candidate will have a post secondary degree in Computer Science, MIS or Business and at least 8 years of progressive IT experience with a strong business and technical understanding. Exceptional ability to immediately establish one's credibility with IT staff and senior executives is key. An asset would be prior leadership experience in post-secondary institutions.

The successful candidate can look forward to an energetic, professional team environment where there is a commitment to personal and professional growth. The University of Lethbridge offers a competitive compensation package with a full range of benefits.

Qualified candidates are invited to apply by January 15, 2012. Please include a detailed resume with references and salary expectations quoting competition #IN01292 to:
